DRIVER'S SEAT

M

Miura. Countach. Diablo. Murcielago. Aventador. The name of every halo car from the house that Ferruccio built. It's an easy list to remember because Lamborghini builds memorable cars, and as the era of combustion draws to a close, the Italian manufacturer has one more name to add: Revuelto.

The new Lamborghini Revuelto is a plug-in hybrid hypercar that produces a combined system output of 1,001 horsepower from its 6.5-liter V12 and three electric motors. If you take the horsepower rating of the most powerful Countach ever sold and combine it with the most powerful Diablo, you'd still have less horsepower than the Revuelto.

Lamborghini sure knows how to stuff a stat sheet, which is why the new Revuelto has earned a coveted place on this month's cover of duPont REGISTRY. Follow along on page 12 where we'll take you through the Revuelto from top to bottom, including how its all-wheel-drive system works, what each of its 13 separate driving modes is for, and when it will go on sale.

Speaking of hybrids, there's a reason why so many supercar manufacturers have chosen this powertrain of late. On page 44, we'll dive into the answer, which not surprisingly involves government regulation designed to reverse the effects of climate change. Fortunately, that happens to dovetail nicely with the pursuit of ultimate performance. It's always nice when the solution to a global threat has exotic cars with four-figure horsepower ratings as a side effect.

Speaking of ridiculous power, there's debate about which SUV is a true supercar for the family. The Aston Martin DBX 707, though, has our money. An Aston Martin for schlepping rugrats around makes sense — after all, James Bond can't still be childless after all that womanizing. A week with this nearly 700-horsepower SUV informed our full review, which you can read on page 24.

If Bond did upgrade to an SUV, he'd need to sell his grand tourers. If there's one thing we know here at dR, it's selling luxury and exotic vehicles. For the first time, we're going to share our wisdom about finding a buyer for your beloved ride. Check out our checklist on page 34 to learn everything you need to know before putting a For Sale sign in your Bentley's window.

We'll also whisk you away to Geneva for special coverage of the Watches & Wonder Show from Switzerland. Check that out on page 68, and don't forget to name us in your will after you find the perfect Patek Philippe for your wrist.

As spring takes root, we sincerely hope you enjoy all the driving time that may have been curtailed by an atmospheric river or two these last few months. So let's roll out those cars and give them the detailing they deserve before reintroducing them to the world after a long winter's nap. We'll see you out there.

The Aventador's long-awaited successor has arrived in the 2024 Lamborghini Revuelto — and it's not just a new shell with old bones. The Revuelto houses an all-new V12 engine, three electric motors, and a dual-clutch transmission.

Its brand-new frame and aviation-inspired monofuselage are made of carbon fiber for rigidity and to keep weight down, especially since the car now carries a lithium-ion battery pack. With so much novelty on board, it's clear that Lamborghini's internal-combustion-powered days are far from over.

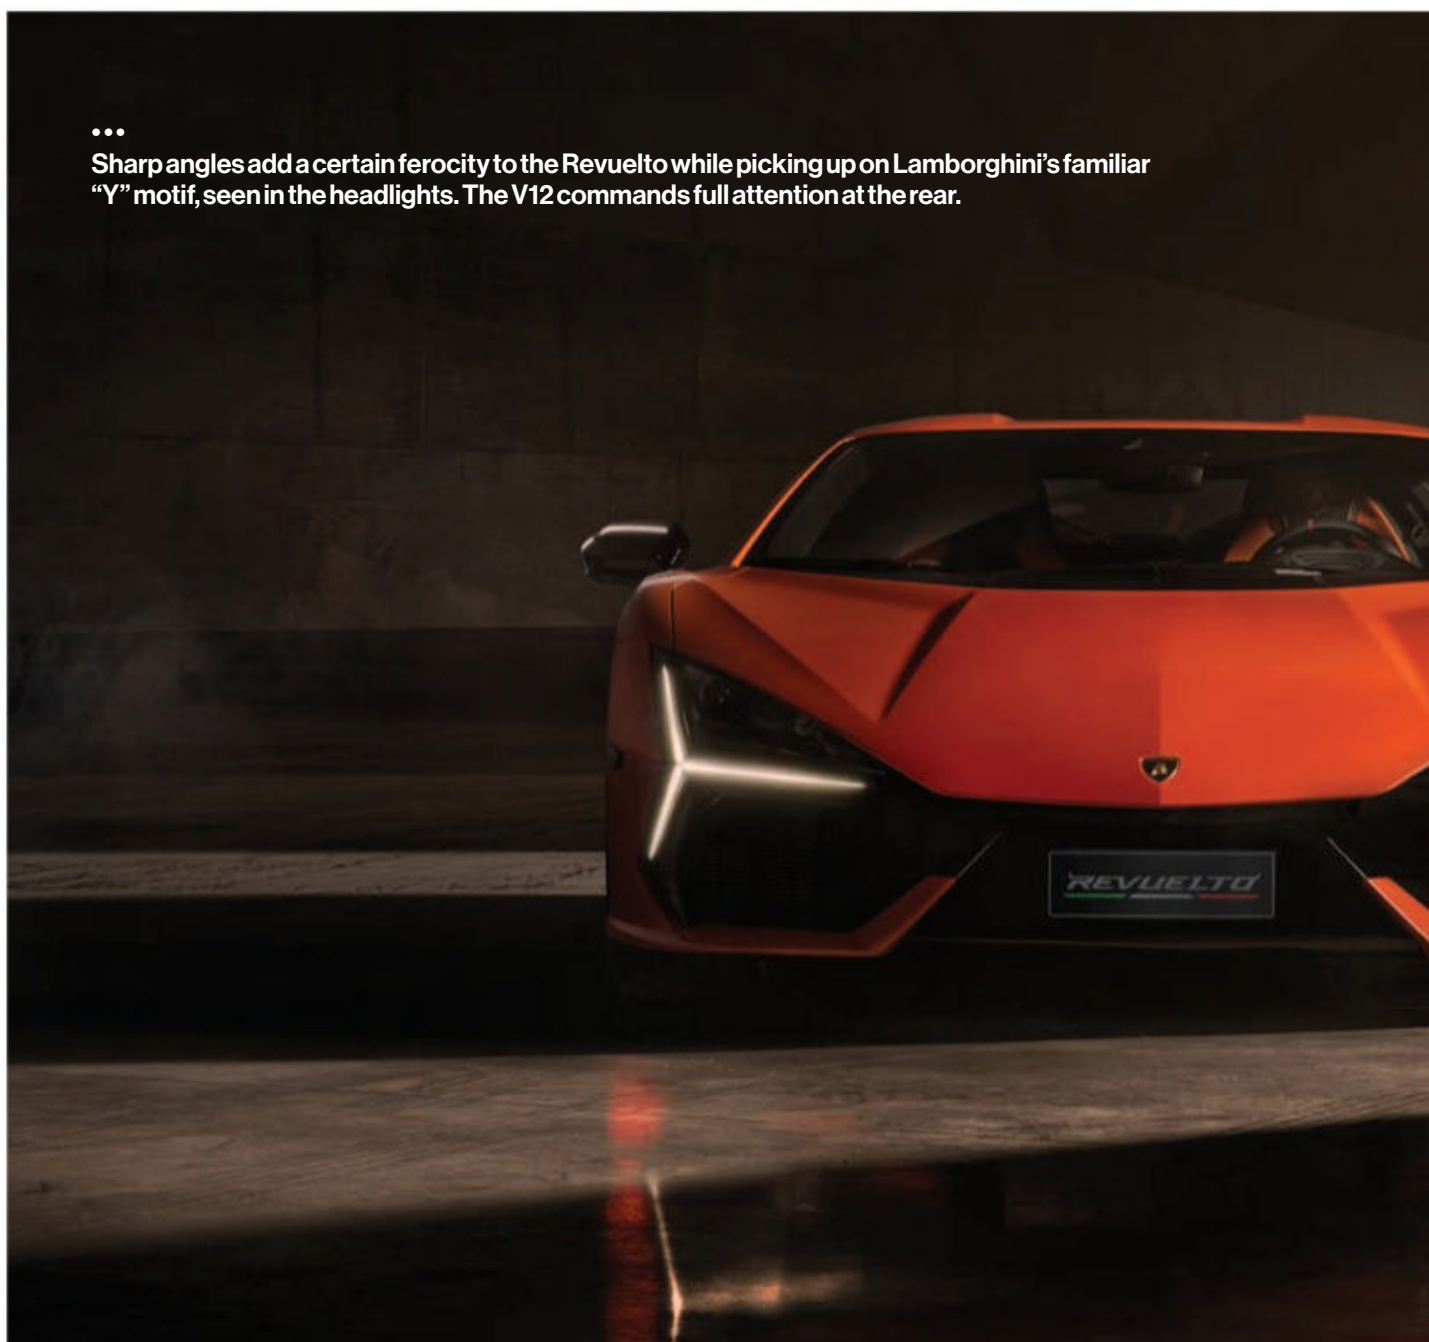

Visually, the Revuelto implements a fresh design language for Lamborghini, although we've seen subtle hints of the "Y" motif in current models like the Huracán Tecnica. This latest flagship takes the motif further by incorporating it into its headlights, taillights, and wheels. Nods to the brand's special-edition models, like the Centenario and Sian, are also apparent throughout the Revuelto's styling. It's not that the Aventador was subtle, but the Revuelto represents a very aggressive take on the carmaker's iconic wedge shape, especially for a regular production model.

From the sharp creases on its carbon fiber hood to its angular side blades and enormous rear diffuser, the model is one of the most outrageous production Lamborghinis we've seen in years. It also retains its active air intakes and rear wing. Depending on the drive mode, the latter changes its angle and height for either efficiency or performance. Lamborghini claims that these aero improvements make the Revuelto 61 percent more efficient while offering 66 percent greater downforce than an Aventador Ultimae.

Sharp angles add a certain ferocity to the Revuelto while picking up on Lamborghini's familiar "Y" motif, seen in the headlights. The V12 commands full attention at the rear.

The Revuelto's powertrain is easily the most complex Lamborghini has developed yet. It starts with a new naturally aspirated 6.5-liter V12, which is 37 pounds lighter than the Aventador's and rotated 180 degrees. It's more powerful, too, producing 813 horsepower at 9,250 rpm and 535 pound-feet at 6,750 rpm without any electric assistance and redlining at 9,500 rpm.

However, this V12 isn't alone. The Revuelto features two axial flux electric motors, each developing up to 258 pound-feet on its front axle, and a radial flux motor making up to 148 horsepower and 110 pound-feet out back. Total system output is 1,001 horsepower. With its tri-motor all-wheel-drive system, the Revuelto jolts to 62 mph in 2.5 seconds and 124 mph in under 7 seconds, topping out at over 217 mph.

The rear motor sits on top of a new eight-speed dual-clutch transmission, which Lamborghini claims isn't just faster than the Aventador's single-clutch unit, but also the Huracán's snappy DCT. The Italian automaker developed the transversely mounted gearbox in-house to reduce its size, ensuring it integrates well with the rear electric motor. There's no reverse gear either, as the two front motors take care of that task, helped along by the rear motor when needed. Its new transverse orientation also better accommodates the Revuelto's longitudinally mounted lithium-ion battery pack.

Lamborghini calls the Revuelto a "high-performance electrified vehicle," referencing its electrified powertrain and the fact that it's a plug-in hybrid. It houses a 3.8-kWh battery pack and can be charged in as little as 30 minutes at up to 7 kW. This means that aside from just making the Revuelto more powerful, the configuration also allows it to drive under electric power alone. Power is capped at 180 horsepower in this mode, but it'll retain all-wheel drive thanks to its tri-motor setup.

Inside, the Revuelto features an updated cabin with an 8.4-inch vertical infotainment system, a 12.3-inch digital instrument cluster, and a 9.1-inch passenger display. The main focal point, however, is its steering wheel, which is covered in buttons to handle a multitude of functions, from toggling drive modes to cruise control, indicators, and wiper controls.

One significant benefit of the Revuelto's new architecture is that it's larger inside, offering an extra inch of headroom and 3.3 inches more legroom than an Ultimae with enough space for a golf bag behind the front seats. Despite adding its electric motors, the Revuelto retains its front storage compartment.

Lamborghini has yet to announce pricing or availability. However, given that the order books are already open, it wouldn't be surprising to see the Revuelto on the road before the end of this year.

REDEFINING PERFORMANCE

WORDS: Gabriel Vega Cortés

The performance SUV segment has grown considerably in the last decade. While the Lamborghini Urus kicked it off in 2018, the category now includes the Porsche Cayenne Turbo GT and the latest entrant, the 2023 Aston Martin DBX 707. However, the British carmaker isn't trying to produce another quick family hauler — this SUV positions itself as a proper supercar replacement.

As its name suggests, the DBX 707 is all about the engine. It's a Mercedes-AMG-sourced 4.0-liter twin-turbocharged V8 whose Affalterbach origins are almost untraceable. To extract 155 horsepower and 147 pound-feet more torque than a standard DBX, Aston Martin gave the 707 new ball-bearing turbochargers and completely reworked the engine calibration. The result is a supercar fighting 697 horsepower and 663 pound-feet of torque output.

To handle the 707's increased power and torque, Aston Martin replaced the nine-speed automatic's torque converter with a wet clutch. It sends power to a rear-biased all-wheel-drive system. In most scenarios, this DBX is rear-wheel drive, with power only going to the front axle when the system detects slip. The 707 utilizes a new electronic limited-slip rear differential with a shorter final drive ratio than the standard DBX. The result is a 3.1-second sprint to 60 mph and a top speed of 193 mph.

So, it's quick — but an SUV with nearly 700 horses would be. What sets the 707 apart is how responsive the engine is. There's little, if any, lag to speak of from the engine, despite its housing larger turbochargers. Power may peak at 6,000 rpm, but this 4.0-liter V8 is eager to rev. And thanks to Aston Martin's unique exhaust setup and engine calibration, the exhaust on this machine, which is fairly loud, delivers a more guttural and burbly tune than any recent AMG model.

Clockwise from opposite: An enlarged grille improves airflow.
The rear features quad exhaust tips and a double diffuser.
Inside, the 707 carries over its infotainment screen and digital instrument cluster from the standard DBX.

The rear-biased nature means it will happily swing its tail around with all of its safety systems disabled. You can't employ a ham-fisted approach when hustling the 707 up a canyon road. It requires focus. And it's that very characteristic that keeps its driver entertained. There's no time for your mind to wander because this enormous muscle car will bite back.

The almost $300,000 SUV features top-of-the-line interior materials and excellent build quality, far surpassing any other Astons I've driven through the years. The 707 feels like a well-put-together product on par with its closest rivals — save for an ancient infotainment system. With 22.3 cubic feet of cargo space on board, it's also fairly roomy and practical. Sure, it's noisy at highway speeds with its big wheels and tires, but those looking to prioritize comfort wouldn't be considering a super-SUV.

The 2023 Aston Martin DBX 707 isn't just another high-horsepower SUV. Alongside the Lamborghini Urus and Porsche Cayenne Turbo GT, it sits in a new category of super-SUVs. Although spacious, practical, and easy to live with, it is no highway cruiser. On a twisty back road, the DBX 707 proves it doesn't only accelerate like a supercar. It'll dance like one too.

POISED TO SELL

Three key steps will ensure your supercar or hypercar sale exceeds buyer expectations, whenever you decide to part with your ride.

WORDS: Jordan Aquistapace

Supercar or hypercar ownership comes with a wealth of joyful emotions for any passionate enthusiast. But the reality is, those feelings tend to fade as tastes change and time passes. These circumstances prove to be even more predictable as leading manufacturers continue to release new models with improved design, performance, and technology.

When the foreseeable day comes to make space in the garage for your next car purchase, it's important to take the necessary presale steps to ensure a smooth transaction for the next owner. Along with the obvious measure of visually prepping your exotic with a thorough wash and detail, updating and securing all service record history will add value while also putting the buyer at ease in making their final decision. Listing a high-dollar vehicle on the appropriate selling platform will also guarantee the traffic of qualified buyers.

Detailing a supercar or hypercar before selling is crucial, as it can significantly enhance resale value. Potential buyers of these high-end automobiles are often meticulous and require a well-maintained example with a pristine appearance. The process involves a thorough cleaning of the interior and exterior, including the engine compartment, wheels, and undercarriage. It ensures the removal of all dust, dirt, and grime. Then, the paintwork is buffed and waxed to a showroom finish. This strategy enhances the vehicle's appearance while showcasing the owner's care and attention. It's the first step in creating a great first impression and maximizing sales potential.

... Buyers of the world's most luxurious automobiles expect the utmost attention to detail from sellers when it comes to car shopping. Plan to provide service reports and other records when you sell your ride.

Maintaining and obtaining service records is essential to ensure that the vehicle continues to perform at its peak and retains value. Following a more tedious maintenance schedule than the average car, exotics like Bugatti, Ferrari, and Lamborghini require strict services outside of regular oil changes, brake inspections, and tire rotations. These otherwise costly services prevent potential issues from developing and extend the overall lifespan. Owners should keep detailed records of all maintenance, warranty work, and additional repairs to provide concrete evidence to interested buyers. These records will be beneficial as they demonstrate that the car has been cared for properly.

Lastly, finding a qualified buyer is vital. The strategy for success lies in advertising with a reputable luxury marketplace such as duPont REGISTRY. Maximize exposure to potential buyers for your high-line exotic on a marketplace that caters to affluent, like-minded individuals. It's also important to do your due diligence in terms of vetting potential buyers, so you can verify their financial standing and ensure a smooth transaction.

In the end, finding the right buyer for your supercar or hypercar can take time and effort but is worth it to get the best price for your prized possession. Make regular detailing and record-keeping part of your routine now to ensure you're equipped to provide the best possible experience for buyers whenever you choose to sell.

LIGHT MY FIRE

Hybrids went from heckled to heroic, but how?

WORDS: Tyler Rampersaud

It wasn't all that long ago that hybrid-powered cars were dismissed as a punchline in the car community, written off as soulless city drivers with nothing to offer outside efficiency and reduced emissions. But three hybrid hypercars flipped the script a little over 10 years ago: the Porsche 918, the McLaren P1, and the Ferrari LaFerrari, all widely admired for their world-changing performance capabilities.

The turn of a new decade has fulfilled the prophecy that this trinity set out: that hybrid power is the future of performance. Today's hybrid performance cars pick up where the legendary trio left off and push the envelope even further, achieving immense power figures and contributing to incredible performance.

But what is it about hybridization that called for such an about-face? Cars like the Lamborghini Revuelto, Chevrolet Corvette E-Ray, and Ferrari SF90 Stradale use hybridization in clever ways to gain higher performance with lower emissions.

For many such supercars, hybridization has unlocked the potential for all-wheel drive, which can allow for improved handling and acceleration. Often, electric motors will drive the front wheels while the combustion engine is responsible for the rear. Another ingenious use of hybrid power can be seen in the Ferrari SF90 Stradale — its eight-speed transmission lacks a reverse gear, so the electric motors take care of it. When going all-out on a straightaway, hybrid supercars enlist the electric motor to continue delivering power and impressive torque when the engine needs help, seen prominently in the McLaren F1.

Hybridization in a performance context has reached beyond supercars. The new Mercedes-AMG S 63 E Performance, with its hybrid system, is the most powerful Mercedes-Benz S-Class ever made. With the help of electric motors, the large luxury sedan rockets from 0 to 60 in just 3.3 seconds.

In the ever-expanding arena of luxury performance SUVs, BMW's XM is a hybrid and the first M-exclusive car since the legendary M1 supercar of the 1980s. Its upcoming Label Red version will sport 748 horsepower, making it the most powerful series-production model in BMW M's history. Now known for its all-electric cars, Polestar debuted with a hybrid grand touring coupe, which paired a four-cylinder, twin-charged engine with a plug-in hybrid system to generate 600 horsepower and 738 pound-feet of torque.

Whether it's in supercars that push engineering capabilities forward, or in performance sedans, SUVs, or coupes, hybrid technology has gone from lambasted to lauded, and it's shaping up to be at the center of an exciting chapter of automotive performance.

Hybrids pack a punch. The Mercedes-AMG S63 E Performance, for example, sets a record as the most powerful S-Class ever made.

WALL OF FAME

We've all seen the images of the pit crew on the pit wall in a joyous state, but it seems those days are over.

WORDS: Ed Jones

PHOTOGRAPHS: Motorsport Images

RECENT RULING

Recently, when the winner of a grand prix crosses the finish line, their entire pit crew is on the pit wall cheering them on. This has led to some of the most iconic photos throughout the years. The pure joy and excitement on the faces of the winning or even podium-placing team is a sight to behold. Now, these moments are gone due to a recent rule enforcement that was put in place before the Melbourne Grand Prix. Released in pre-weekend event safety notes, F1 race director Niels Wittich noted that "it is forbidden to climb on pitwall debris fence at any time."

THE RULE

Interestingly enough, this news shouldn't be shocking if you take a look at FIA's International Sporting Code. Appendix H, Article 2.3.2 specifically states that "team personnel are only allowed in the pit lane immediately before they are required to work on a car and must withdraw as soon as the work is complete." Furthermore, this specific article goes on to say: "It is forbidden for personnel to climb on pit wall debris fences at any time. Any action by a team breaching this ban will be reported to the Stewards." This rule was set in place for the 2006 season but has not been enforced over the years.

PIT WALL PITFALL

While it's sad to see this tradition disappear, you can't argue with the rulebook. And if any team were to disregard the rules and jump up on the pit wall fence, they would be subject to a penalty in one form or another. As for what the penalty would amount to remains to be seen. Even if the penalty isn't considered, it's obviously not terribly safe to climb onto a tall fence and risk falling onto a track where cars are traveling at high rates of speed. That being said, we will all miss the images and clips of the teams celebrating their victory as their driver passes the checkered flag.

WHAT'S TICKING?

The Watches & Wonders exhibition showcased the industry's latest horological trends and innovations.

WORDS: Roberta Naas

Earlier this year, the world's largest and most important exhibition of watches, Watches & Wonders, took place in Geneva. With almost 50 exhibitors showcasing in the Pal Expo exhibition hall — and dozens more scattered around the city at smaller shows, hotels, and boutiques — this event was (and always is) the place to be for watch lovers. Top brands use this event to unveil their newest masterpieces — watches that will set wrist trends for the entire year and, maybe, years to come.

Innovations run the gamut from revolutionary new technical concepts to patented inventions, new materials, and boundary-bending designs. Top trends that ought to be on your radar include new colorways (red, green, and salmon), unique and whimsical dial motifs (inspired by jigsaw puzzles, pop art, and Kermit the Frog), an emphasis on certain categories (skeletonized open-worked movements and multiple time zones), and three-dimensional movements and dial architecture. Some brands, though, brought the heat in other ways. Here, we take a look at three top trends that you just might find are worth your investment.

EXCLUSIVE CONTENT

For additional stories about the world's top watch brands, horological trends, and auctions, scan this QR code with your preferred mobile device.

World Firsts

Every year, certain watch brands surprise us with “world first” watches that lead the way for other inventions down the road. Whether it be an all-new color of sapphire (something that can take years to develop), another material not yet used in watchmaking, or a new feature or function, these innovations are the most anticipated of the year.

Roger Dubuis delighted horophiles with the Monovortex Split Seconds Chronograph, wielding an entirely new winding system and housed in ultra-lightweight Mineral Composite Fiber made almost entirely of silica.

In a more classic presentation, Parmigiani Fleurier also released a world first: this time using the Rattrapante. Until now, the Rattrapante (which means “catch up” in French) has been used in a split-second chronograph, where multiple events can be timed at once; the additional timing hand works by “catching up” to the first timing hand. Now, with the Parmigiani Fleurier Tonda PF Minute Rattrapante, the brand reinterprets the “catch up” hand, using it to set the extra hand ahead by one- or five-minute increments. This makes it easy to time something or set a reminder. As the regular minute hand gets closer to the “set” time, the wearer is reminded that time is fleeing. A push of a button sends the second hand back to its place, tucked away beneath the main minute hand.

Complications

Always a huge trend, highly complicated watches were prevalent at the show. Complications that excite us this year include the retrograde function, wherein a watch times something — like a day or date indication — in an arc format. When the hand reaches the end (for instance, the 30th of a month), it jumps back to the beginning to start the tracking all over again. Vacheron Constantin released several new watches this year with the beloved retrograde complication.

Tourbillon escapements — wherein the tourbillon cage compensates for timekeeping errors caused by the effects of gravity on the wrist in certain positions — continue to be an important category. So do perpetual calendar watches with moon phases that remain accurate for 122 years before needing an adjustment; multiple time zone indications; and the beloved chronograph.

Motorsports

There just wouldn't be a world of motorsport without watches to time the races. For that reason, many a watch brand has aligned with and sponsored top racing series, drivers, and tracks over the years and even developed timepieces to celebrate those relationships.

Rolex, for instance, has been timing races around the world

Vacheron Constantin's Patrimony Retrograde Day Date indicates the date and day using a hand that jumps back to zero at the end of each tracking cycle. Price upon request.

The Monovortex Split Second Chronograph from Roger Dubuis features an all-new way to wind the watch and a new super lightweight case material. Concept watch, not for sale.

ART HOUSE

*At the Phillips Photographs
New York Auction, several lots exceeded their sale estimations.*

WORDS: Roberta Naas

In early April, Phillips held its Photographs New York Auction and realized $6.4 million in sales of vintage and contemporary photographs. More than 300 lots crossed the block. Spanning almost 170 years, from the 1850s all the way through 2019, this sale was indicative of a surge within the art world, where bidding is growing more and more frenzied as connoisseurs look to snap up certain works for investment portfolios and to beautify their homes.

For those looking to get in on the long-term profits of a good art investment, one option is to study and bid for the big names — artists and photographers known for their specific style of work. American photographer Ansel Adams, for instance, is renowned for his black and white landscape and nature photographs. No other photographer from his era was as successful with large prints of nature.

Adams' work commands strong pricing, and rarely, if ever, does a lot up for sale fail to sell. All of his photographs in the recent Phillips auction sold, most within their estimates but several surpassing them. The top lot in the auction, Lot 203 from the Bunnell Collection (a silver print of Adams' 1941 photo "Moonrise, Hernandez, New Mexico") was estimated to hammer between $150,000 and $250,000; it sold for $381,000.

Lot 259, another Ansel Adams stunner, claimed the fifth highest sale overall: the 1931 mural-sized gelatin silver print "Leaves, Mills College." Estimated to go for between $30,000 and $50,000, it soared up to $254,000.

From top: Lot 81, "Untitled #546" by Cindy Sherman, hammered at $355,600. Lot 213, "World's Fair, New York City" by Garry Winogrand (part of the Bunnell Collection), garnered $40,640.

Lot 177, "Harlequin Dress (Lisa Fonssagrives-Penn)" by Irving Penn, was the third highest-selling lot. Printed in 1979 as a platinum palladium print, the signed artwork was estimated to sell for $200,000 to $300,000 and went for $355,600. Penn's photographs were often seen in glossy magazines. In the 1960s, he turned his attention to the idea of platinum printing because of its grayscale abilities, offering a great array of gradations from white to black. The process was complex and time consuming but yielded incredible results that contributed to his success.

Acclaimed fashion photographer Cindy Sherman, who once shot a series in Iceland with Chanel, had another top-grossing piece. Lot 81, "Untitled #546 from 2010," is an example of that work. It features two self-portraits mounted together with the waterfalls in the background dwarfed by the large figures in the foreground. The juxtaposition, and the poses of the figures, makes this image a blend of fantasy and fiction. The print was estimated to sell for $150,000 to $200,000 but actually sold for $355,600.

Of the total 317 lots up for sale, lots 203 through 240 comprised a remarkable collection from the late Peter C. Bunnell, a photography historian, teacher, and author. The proceeds from the sales of these lots went to six museums and universities Bunnell was associated with, so they can form endowments to support the study of photographic history. One of the Bunnell Collection images, Lot 213, was by Garry Winogrand. Entitled "World's Fair, New York City," the gelatin silver print circa 1964 sold for more than $15,000 above its estimate, going for $40,640.

While these masterpieces have sold, there are a host of upcoming auctions this fall by Phillips and other auction houses where you can get in on the action. The key to buying art at auction: Set your budget beforehand and have fun in the process.
